One night information was brought to Mr. I—, and myself that a murder had been committed there, and we hastened to ascertain the facts and arrest, if it were possible, the criminal. Reaching the place we ascended an old rickets startwar to a room in the best part. kety stairway to a room in the back part of the building. A crowd, such as invariably gather to the scene of a homicide, were already there, looking on with pallid, awe struck faces at the body of a man lying dead on the floor. It was a youthful face that shone pallid and white in the glare of the burning lamps-a calm, white face, and the broad brow disclosed a mind instinct with intelligence. His apparel, although neat, was coarse, and but for the soft slender FOR GIRLS AND ROYS.

was coarse, and but for the soft stender hands and the costly jewel that glittered on his finger, one might have deemed him a man of humble life. In his hand was a piece of a woman's dress, and the knife that still remained in his breast was a costly knife, fit only for a woman's use. It had penetrated the heart, and the man had died without a struggle.
"Who had killed him?

"It was the question on every lip, and filled the daily papers afterward. "You may have read an account of it in an old copy of the New Orleans Picayune. "No one was living in the house at the time-for weeks before it had been deserted—only the neighbors said that for weeks at night they had seen a light flash from the window. It was soon put out, and no sounds of footsteps were heard—only on the night of the homicide a cry had seen heard—a scream as it from a woman-the patter of running feet, and then all was still.

This was all. "We searched the building high and low but nothing more could be ascertained. On the body of the dead man was found some papers, which showed him to be a foreign-er-a Spaniard, indeed; and the miniature of a woman young and beautiful, and evinc-ing in the haughty poise of the head—the jewels that flashed from her hair, the air of nameless grace about her-a creature born to a heritage of wealth as well as beauty. It was a singular face, however, and would rivet the eyes of all that looked upon it. The warm flush of her native clime seemed the warm dust of her native cline seemed still to rest upon the rounded cheeks and chiseled lips, and the coronal of braided hair rested like a crown upon her head. The eyes were large and soft, and one seemed to see the picture of Genesicse or Evremand, radient in smiles looking at him from the painted ivory. It was such a face as poets dream of or painters picture in their visions of the beautiful. But there was a look of life about it which showed it the semblance of a living creature. A lit-tle jewelled finger touched the crimsoned lips, which seemed parted to speak in jest or laugh or smile. I could almost swear the cadence of that laugh was musical, as the sunny smiles were beautiful. It wore a look of joy and brightness such as the rays has a hankerin' that way." m fling on the petals of a flower or the bud of a rose when it sparkles in 14 - 1y dew.

Night and day we studied it, and no clue was left unfolded, no trace disregarded, that might contribute to our success. So the days sped on, from weeks to months—a year had nearly passed and gone. Business of importance called me to New York. One day, in company with some friends, I visited the Insane Asylum. Imagine my surprise-I had almost said horror -when I teli you that among the immates I met the original of the picture—a maniac. There could be no doubt of it—here in all the glory of her young womanhood, in all her beauty. The malady that had shat-tered reason had still left her the wonderous beauty that had first attracted my attention. Here was a clue.

"I ascertained that she had been brought there months before by a man who represented himself as her father, and who occasionally visited her, but for whom she expressed the utmost horror, and would always address him as a murderer. I asked to see her wardrobe and among her clothing found an old dress with a piece torn out, 13-16 similar to that found in the hands of the pole.

MY WIFE.

With what love and respect the good man and worthy husband speaks of that dear creature whom God has given him for a companion through life. Note his actions and observe his better half, and you will see that her image is reflected in him. I care not how great a man he may be; I care not how austere and strong minded he may be; so that he loves her. Her influence is felt every day, and her loving words and feminine dependence exerts a power within him that otherwise might have slombered unknown and torgotten. In the language of Bulwer, "her imaged glossed in is soul, lures him on to those inspiring toils by which man masters men."

Our greatest statesmen, our greatest hepotent influence of either a wife or a mother's love.

Man must have something to love, something to stimulate him and raise him from that state of thraldom in which the cares and anxieties of an every day life usually plunge him.

What friend can take a wife's place; who but she can administer consolation which is ever free from suspicious, the hope of disinterestedness, other than that of a holy desire and deep anxiety to make you "She can go where she pleases," said I, She gamerly duz."

"Yew air a hole sold man," said she, and and loving effectively source in her presence and loving effective. throwin' her arms around my neck, last harbinger of love, truth and devotion.

Men have yearnings for disinterested love. Once convince a man that he is beloved for himself alone, independent of his wealth, his riches, and his station, or of the many advantages of which he may be possessed-let him see, I say, that he is loved for himself, and you may make him your slave for lile. Such a man blessed with a noble woman for a wife, is capable him had he not some one to offer him those little words of consolation which lighten the burdens of life.

At the Ocean House in Portsmouth. It is a large, convenient, comfortably arranged hotel, and is gracefully presided over by B. F. Briggs, a native North Carolinian. Most of the North Carolina travel stop Captain's eye he -aw the devit there and off he at this hotel.

ON THE WAY HERE.

On the way from Richmond here there was nothing for the eye to catch save the long line of drought that has fallen upon the country. There was no tife at the different depots as you find on the Danville goad. At Waverly there were a half dozen grown men down on their bares in the sand playing "knucke

At another there was a litter of young dogs, two pigs a fighting, and a young negro gaping in his cabin door with a fine tooth comb stocking in his kinky head-This was all.

As we passed through it was on fire. And the smoke was so dense in some places that you couldn't put up a ear window. In some places in the swamp the fire has burned down ten feet in the earth. There is said to be quite a stampede among the animals of the swamp; several bears are said to have been lately killed. The swamp was set on fire in some way. Happens every Fall; sometimes catching five from the sparks of the engine, Norfolk.

The people of Norfolk are making active prepara ons for the Fall Trade. They are the busiest set of folks I ever saw. And they have every incentive to keep them busy. Trade and marketing flourish about them at a time when in other cities a dearth of inac tivity pervades the place. I shall certainly be pardoned by the fair sex for once more making public mention of the charms of the Norfolk women. They were surely made to be queens among beauties and beauties among queens. Though it is "not for Joe" to go any further than merely look on and admire. OTSTERA.

A CARD TO THE CONSERVATIVE Far PARTY.

As the excitement of our Township Elec-As the excitement of our lownship Elec-tion has passed away and the angry storms of political feeling has subsided, I thought it nothing amiss to make some defence for myself, having been falsely misrepresented by some of the Conservative party; and in doing so I want it distinctly understood that it is not my intention to speak in a personal manner about any one, as I have always endeavored to treat every man as a gentleman, and I dely any man to speak to the contrary, and as much as this is true, I demand from all that consider themselves Frost and the Corn Crop in New Hampshire.

We met a gentleman on the Norfolk and Peters. burg Road who hailed from New Hampshire. Herespeak evil of his fellow man without any provocation, all such men I will unsparthat State, and said there had been two killing fronts in August that had damaged the crops considerably. The heaviest frust fell on the 7th and 8th of August. Lic indignation. It has been my lot to be born in a humble sphere of life, with but very few advantages even of getting an English education. No flowers have been strewn in my pathway save those of a thorny nature, and it need not be expected of me to speak only in a plain way; and in doing this I shall avoid saying any thing save that which I believe to be true.

On the 14th of July I came out in a pub-lic card denouncing the injustice of the Conservative Convention which met in the Court House on the 10th of that month, and it seems that caused a great deal of dissatisfaction in the Conservative ranks : I was severely censured by some, and by others branded as a disorganizer. Gentlemen, I told nothing but the truth; and in doing so I did not desire to cause hard feelings from the Conservative party towards

You can answer this question very accurately when you let your passions quiet down and cease to be governed by the remaining prejudices that rankles in your boson. I belong to no po-litical organization of any kind. I have been charged with uniting my name with the Radical party; also with visiting the midnight League, and seeking the nomina-tion of that party. I brand these allegations as maliciously and infamously talee. I am a white man and I have never changed my color, my platform is that of the American Union, that old Constitution that was framed by those illustrious men that have long since passed away; and when unprinciple men trample on these rights hurl them from power and cause terror and dismay to enter their ranks; and if the Conservative party think that I am not the right man and in the right place, I will-ehearfully resign the office and you can appoint a man of your

It is not well to take everything that grows off of the soil, and put nothing on.

TRAINING HORSES .- Colts are left entirely too long before they are taken in hand for breaking in. Their future life should be part of their earliest education; instead of, as now, left to go as they list until the time arrives for the professional "breaker" to practice on them. It is just as easy, while commencing to famile and pet with them, to learn them to be obedient to the halter and other things; and they would then be brought to work more easily, and with a better spirit than they now often are.

ROSCHES AND ANTS .- These troublesome pests were never so plentiful as this season; trophical weather generates trophical an novances. We give our readers a South American remedy for cockroaches, which has been used in Philadelphia with perfect success. To rid kitchens, pantries and water closets of these disgusting visitors, take powdered borax and scatter wherever the cockronches most frequent, and they will disappear directly.
